Product Jobs in 2023

Annual barometer

THIGA

MOKA.CARE

Hello to the entire Product community!

This edition of the LPC survey you're browsing is probably the largest since we launched this initiative in 2018.

Significant in terms of numbers: 1,308. That's a lot for a profession whose community was born ten years ago and is still largely unknown beyond the "tech" world. A huge thank you to all of you for taking the time to share this useful information.

Important because it comes at a tipping point. The growth of our profession has closely followed that of fundraising. Many of us have therefore caught the profitability wave head-on.

The vocation of the product has always been to have an economic impact, not just to create value for users. The rise of Product Marketing is a very encouraging sign of this realization: the Product business doesn't stop at delivering functionality.

But like any sudden change, this shift is accompanied by side effects. Some are obvious: tighter budgets, redundancies, a rebalancing between demand and supply that affects salary progression. Others are less obvious. Such is the case with the impact on our mental health.

That's why we decided to form a partnership with moka.care, whose aim is to help companies create healthier working environments.

In this way, we wanted to highlight issues that we are still too powerless to address, both individually and collectively. It's often difficult to confide in our colleagues, HR or managers. The subject remains taboo in the workplace.

Whether in the February 2023 study conducted by moka.care or in this barometer, it appears that over 50% of respondents consider that a mental health problem sometimes affects their productivity.

Work intensity and workload are by far the main psychosocial risk factors affecting Product People. We would like to highlight two facts: 66% of Product Marketing Managers report that their work intensity and workload affect their mental health, compared to an average of 43% of all respondents. However, this psychosocial risk is less prevalent in companies with one Product Manager (30%) than in those with 20 Product People (50%).

The rest of the study follows on from last year. We have delved into many aspects of the roles of Product Manager, Product Designer and Product Marketing Manager, from the most junior to the most senior. Organizations, activities, salaries, parity, you'll find a wealth of information in our study.

We're continuing to monitor gender pay, which we feel is crucial given the extent of inequality in tech, both in terms of numbers and salaries. The good news this year is that, with the slowdown in salary increases, a real rebalancing is taking place. However, it is still too high among Product Leaders.

Finally, we have modified the parameter of years of experience in the Product to be consistent with the methods used to calculate market salary surveys. We have now counted the total number of years of professional experience.

We wish you an excellent read and a profitable year ahead!

Fabrice des Mazery for the La Product Conf team and Guillaume d'Ayguesvives for the moka.care team.
